They then go on to address video art in art historical categories, as if its disciplinary complication of art, pop culture, technology, and mass-communication had been effectively neutralized. In Feedback: Television Against Democracy, however, David Joselit adopts the contrary tactic. He seizes upon the complicated nature of video as both a fine art and a commercial mass media to examine the politics of aesthetics.

Feedback proposes a different perspective, an organic (re)view of the individuals that rebelled against television's domesticity, trying to enhance a perspective in which art stands against television and television against democracy. Joselit's mission lies in describing the politics of the images themselves and the way in which art history and visual culture might participate in its procedures.

In Feedback, David Joselit describes the privatized public sphere of television and recounts the tactics developed by artists and media activists in the 1960s and 1970s to break open its closed circuit. The figures whose work Joselit examines--among them Nam June Paik, Dan Graham, Joan Jonas, Abbie Hoffman, Andy Warhol, and Melvin Van Peebles--staged political interventions within television's closed circuit.
