The Other City (Czech Literature Series) by Ajvaz, Michal ...
The Other City is a novel of another Prague, a second city layered largely invisibly behind the first, familiar one. Steeped in the fiction of Prague-based authors who dabbled in the mystical and fantastical, ranging from Kafka through Leo Perutz and Gustav Meyrink to Karel Čapek, and with a healthy dose of Borges thrown in for good measure, Ajvaz offers a semi-alternate-universe novel whose greatest appeal is the overlap of this secondary world with the first.

The Other City by Michal Ajvaz is by far the oddest book I have read this year and it has been quite a year for odd books. But where Smith's Only Forward and Harkaway's The Gone-Away World was odd because of the absurdity and, in the case of the latter, randomness found within, The Other City is odd because it presents a world of wonderment that exists all around us and that we willingly blind ourselves to.

The Other Cityby Michal Ajvaz (Druhé mesto, 1993)translated from the Czech by Gerald Turner (2009)Dalkey Archive (2009)168 pp. T o my knowledge, the only Czech literature I've read is from that fairly famous author who has his own adjective. It was to expand my range, more than anything then, that led me to open Michal Ajvaz's The Other City, lauded as a hymn to Prague, a city I've never been to but hope to visit.

The other city is an example of such a world, and it is not without significance that our narrator encounters so many difficulties in getting to the center of this city, in penetrating the mystery. Can we ever know a world completely different from our own?

Zombie Chekhov: Review: The Other City by Michal Ajvaz
Michal Ajvaz is a Czech novelist, essayist, poet, and translator. He is a researcher at Prague's Center for Theoretical Studies. In addition to fiction, he has published an essay on Derrida, a book-length meditation on Borges, and a philosophical study on the act of seeing.
