Queue Manager
Failover By default, in an OpenVMS Cluster environment, the queue manager tries to fail over to another node if the node on which the queue manager is running leaves the cluster. You can specify the order in which OpenVMS Cluster nodes claim the queue manager process; you can also limit the nodes that can run the queue manager.

OpenVMS System Manager's Manual

The Digital TCP/IP Services for OpenVMS product supports OpenVMS cluster systems and the use of cluster aliases. The network sees the cluster as one system with one name, called the internet alias. A remote host can use the cluster alias to address the cluster as one host or use the host name of a cluster member to address a cluster member individually.
