Every Riven Thing is Christian Wiman's first collection in seven years, and rarely has a book of poetry so
borne the stamp of necessity. Whether in stark, haiku-like
descriptions of a
cancer ward,
surrealistic depictions
of a social order
coming apart, or fluent, defiant outpourings of praise, Wiman pushes
his language and forms
until they break open,
revealing startling new truths within.

This is evinced by Ambition and Survival,
as well as Wiman's
poetry, for instance
"From a Window" from the lines "that life is not the life of men /

And that is where the joy came in." Joy,
grace, God—as these concepts are not
subject to ambition,
which means they
cannot be secured by the exercise of free

The On Being
Project

Review. Every Riven
Thing. By Christian
Wiman. Farrar, Straus and Giroux. Like many contemporary poets, Christian Wiman is

interested in describing
human experience
beyond what can be
contained by language.
However, instead of
undermining language
to expose its
limitations, the poems
in his new book, Every Riven Thing, embrace
the ability of words to convey meaning and,
in doing so, to bring us
closer to the uncertain, utterly mysterious
experience of being
alive.

What is riven, what is broken, what is torn asunder is not, the resurrection says, done
for. Christ is crucified, Christ is risen, and the one on the cross could not remain on in the grave. So, go on an Easter morning run.
Repair your broken

dishes with gold.

Praise to the pain scalding us toward each other, the grief beyond which, please God, she will live and thrive. And praise to the light that is not yet, the dawn in which one bird believes, crying not as if there had been no night but as if there were no night in which it had not been. In Every Riven Thing, the poet explores disease, grief and faith in three sections that move from the speaker's anguished acceptance of his circumstance of disease, through an interlude of despair, to a focused theological framing of his condition. With EVERY RIVEN THING (2010), I have now read three books of Christian Wiman poems. The other two were "Hard Night" (2005) and "Once in the West" (2014). In all three Wiman has the same distinctive poetic voice. To quote Brian Doyle, "This is haunting stuff--this is language turned and tuned to a pitch where it is both quiet scream and humble song."

Wiman's poetry was interesting in the past—accomplished, creative, a good read—but his book Every Riven Thing has some work that soars, that uses words and their music as wild prayers, questions, arrows: My God my grief forgive my grief tamed in language to a fear that I can bear. Make of my anguish
