Fillers And Filled Polymers Macromolecular

This was the main topic of the first joint meeting 8th European Symposium on Polymer Blends and Eurofillers 2005, showing that problems concerning ‘filled polymers’ and ‘polymer blends’ are often very similar and deserve attention from both scientific communities.

The viscoelastic glass-to-rubber softening transition is analyzed for various cross-linked polymers reinforced with filler particles. We find that the loss modulus peak corresponding to the segmental relaxation process (glass transition) is not significantly affected by the particle surface area in carbon black-filled polybutadiene or by silane chemical coupling of poly(styrene-co-butadiene) to silica.

The polymer units at the interface with the filler particles are arranged in densely packed and ordered shells analogous to those found near planar solid surfaces. The polymer chains, reduced in size compared to the unfilled melt, are constituted of sequences of surface segments, totally contained in the interface shell of a given particle, and of bridge segments, connecting different particles.
