Eye for detail. Dogs do not have a good eye for detail, or the ability to pick out the finer features of things. This means that dogs can view large obstacles and clear delineations much more clearly than they can view subtleties, and your dog is unable to be likely to pick our specific patterns or markings, such as on their bedding or your furniture. The cones of the eyes provide acuity of vision, and the eye of the dog does not have any area that is 100% cones, unlike people. This means ...
