In Glory Season, David Brin depicts a world with an intensely matriarchal society. The majority of the population of Stratos consists of female clones, "sparked" in winter by male sperm, but genetic copies of their mothers. Men and "variant" girls are born in summer. Designed this way the founders of Stratos, this society is supposedly pastora

Glory Season by Brin, David

Brin describes a world where technology has been used to develop a culture with a wildly different sexual component and that's the backdrop for his well-told story. The feature I liked about both "Glory Season" and "Left Hand" is that both do a good job of developing believable characters and plots in very unusual scenarios.
