Injection moulding (U.S. spelling: injection molding) is a manufacturing process for producing parts by injecting molten material into a mould, or mold. Injection moulding can be performed with a host of materials mainly including metals (for which the process is called die-casting), glasses, elastomers, confections, and most commonly thermoplastic and thermosetting polymers.

Changing color or resin in an injection molding machine is a significant hassle confronted by all molders.

Changeovers take time (both machine and operator) and cost money in the form of wasted material. This is time and resin you cannot sell to your customer. The challenge for molders is to minimize these losses.
