Using data on expenditures and life expectancy by income quintile from the Canadian health care system, I find that universal, publicly-funded health insurance is modestly redistributive. Putting $1 of tax funds into the public health insurance system effectively channels between $0.23 and $0.26 toward the lowest income quintile people, and about $0.50 to the bottom two income quintiles.

Health Care Financing, Efficiency, and Equity | NBER

Health Financing: The Macroeconomic Level. Financing health care has evolved from personal payment at the time of service delivery to financing through health insurance (prepayment) by the employer and employee at the workplace. This has progressed in most industrialized countries towards governmental financing through social security or general taxation, supplemented by private and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) (Table 11.3), and personal out-of-pocket expenditures.
