Of the first five variables, being a country that by a large has the first option (for instance, a two party system) means that the country is majoritarian. The second would be a consensus democracy (in this example it would be a multiparty system). Of the last five, the first option of each variable means centralization.

In Patterns of Democracy (1999, 2nd ed., 2012), Lijphart classifies thirty-six democracies using these attributes. He finds consensus democracies to be "kinder, gentler" states, having lower incarceration rates, less use of the death penalty, better care for the environment, more foreign aid work, and more welfare spending – qualities he feels "should appeal to all democrats".
