Liverpool University Press: Books: Ancoats

on October 13, 2016. As one Manchester writer said of the world's first industrial suburb. "It holds a place in his history for being the first residential district of the modern world which was intended for the occupation solely of one class, what was to become the new urban working class." The origins of its name go back to the 13th century as "Elnecoy" meaning lonely cottages could well be the derivation of the name that we know today as Ancoats, Cotes being a derivative from ...
