Expressive Therapies Continuum: A Framework for Using Art ...

The expressive therapies continuum is a model of creative functioning used in the field of art therapy that is applicable to creative processes both within and outside of an expressive therapeutic setting. The concept was initially proposed and published in 1978 by art therapists Sandra Kagin and Vija Lusebrink, who based the continuum on existing models of human development and information processing. This schematic model serves to describe and assess an individual's level of creative function.
