Railway Crew Rescheduling With Retiming

The first contribution of this paper is a new formulation for railway crew rescheduling with retiming, where the retiming options are modeled as discrete alternatives. Moreover, we show how to adapt the solution approach of Potthoff et al. (2010) in order to keep the increase in computation time for the extended model moderate. We evaluate our approach based on real-life data from Netherlands Railways (NS), the largest passenger railway operator in the Netherlands.

Railway Crew Rescheduling With Retiming

Railway operators have to deal with several disruptions during the day. These disruptions can make the timetable, rolling stock schedule and crew schedule infeasible. In this thesis, we present a column generation approach to reschedule the crew if a disruption made the crew schedule infeasible. This crew rescheduling approach uses retiming.
