"La Règle du jeu" (Rules of the game) was one of the last French films made before World War II. It depicts a world of privileged individuals whittling their time away while the world crumbles around them. "La Règle du jeu" is the crowning achievement of Jean Renoir, son of painter Auguste Renoir. This movie exposes you to spoken French from the '30s. If you can, I recommend reading some older French literature before watching; it'll help your vocab comprehension.

Film Adaptations of French Literature (FRE4492.01) Since the very beginnings of cinema, French literature and film have reciprocally inspired one another. From the Surrealists to the New French Extremity movement, many directors have brought French literary works onto the screen. This course will offer students the opportunity to analyze literature and their film adaptations in terms of intermediality and intertextuality.

French literature - French literature - The Middle Ages: By 50 bc, when the Roman occupation of Gaul under Julius Caesar was complete, the region's population had been speaking Gaulish, a Celtic language, for some 500 years. Gaulish, however, gave way to the conquerors' speech, Vulgar Latin, which was the spoken form of Latin as used by the soldiers and settlers throughout the Roman Empire.
