Language Rights And The Law

This book examines the language policies relating to linguistic rights in European Union law and in the constitutions and legal statutes of some European Union member states. In recent years, the European Union has seen an increase in claims for language recognition by minority groups representing a considerable population (such as Catalan in Spain and Welsh in the UK).

Language Rights and the Law in the European Union ...

Linguistic rights are the human and civil rights concerning the individual and collective right to choose the language or languages for communication in a private or public atmosphere. Other parameters for analyzing linguistic rights include the degree of territoriality, amount of positivity, orientation in terms of assimilation or maintenance, and overtness.

Linguistic rights - Wikipedia

Linguistic rights protect the individual and collective right to choose one's language or languages for communication both within the private and the public spheres. They include the right to speak one's own language in legal, administrative and judicial acts, the right to receive education in one's own language, and the right for media to be broadcast in one's own language.

Linguistic rights - Minority Rights Group

Language and law are inextricably linked – the law is an inherently linguistic construct: it is largely created, interpreted and applied through language. Language is, therefore, an extremely important part of, and has a significant impact on the development of any legal order. While this link between law and language exists across all legal orders, at every level, it is more visible and arguably more important where the law in question is multilingual.

Language of the law | Language Teaching | Cambridge Core

The use of language is crucial to any legal system, not only in the same way that it is crucial to politics in general, but also in two special respects. Lawmakers characteristically use language to make law, and law must provide for the authoritative resolution of disputes over the effects of that use of language.

Law and Language (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Linguistic rights in Europe are stated in constitutions which differ by country. These constitutions usually state the national language or official language, and may or may not explicitly allow for other languages in the country. Most of the linguistic rights stated here are negative rights, which grant freedom of usage of own language and prevents discrimination based on language. Some countries do offer positive rights: for example provision of language education from State funds in Austria,
