Resistance in Plants
- ResearchGate

One of the main issues in modern agriculture is the ever-increasing occurrence of herbicide resistance in weeds. From an agronomic view, herbicide resistance can be defined as the inherited ability of a plant to survive and reproduce after the exposure to a dose of herbicide that is normally lethal to a wild-type plant of the same species . This dynamic process impacts on both crop production and the environment, and it represents a major challenge to farmers, scientists and the agribusiness ...

Herbicide resistant

Herbicide resistance is the ability of a weed biotype to survive an herbicide application, where under normal circumstances that herbicide applied at the recommended rate would kill the weed. In contrast, plant tolerance to a particular herbicide is the inherent ability of that plant species to survive and reproduce after treatment with that herbicide.

Glyphosate-resistant weeds present the greatest threat to sustained weed control in major agronomic crops because this herbicide is used to control weeds with resistance to herbicides with other sites of action, and no new herbicide sites of action have been introduced for over 30 years. Industry has responded by developing herbicide resistance traits in major crops that allow existing herbicides to be used in a new way.

Overview of glyphosate-resistant weeds worldwide

There are currently 514 unique cases (species x site of action) of herbicide resistant weeds globally, with 262 species (152 dicots and 110 monocots). Weeds have evolved resistance to 23 of the 26 known herbicide sites of action and to 167 different herbicides. Herbicide resistant weeds have been reported in 94 crops in 71 countries. The website has 2975 registered users and 629 weed scientists have contributed new cases of herbicide resistant weeds.

International Herbicide-Resistant Weed Database

Once a weed population is exposed to a herbicide to which one or more plants are naturally resistant, the herbicide kills susceptible individuals, but allows resistant individuals to survive and reproduce.

Group 2, Group 9 and Group 14 herbicides that have been used in Roundup Ready systems are not doing the trick anymore, Werle said. Fighting herbicide resistance with herbicides will only last so long, he warned. Producers need to consider what additional non-chemical weed-control strategies they will adopt in 2021.

Weed herbicide resistance worsens | Crops | agupdate.com

Intergroup herbicide resistance in various weed species has been the main impetus for changes in management practices and adoption of cropping systems that reduce selection for resistance. The effectiveness and adoption of herbicide and nonherbicide tactics and practices for the proactive and reactive management of herbicide-resistant (HR) weeds are reviewed.

Herbicide-Resistant Weeds: Management Tactics and ...

Weeds that can resist multiple other herbicides are spreading. Few new herbicides are near commercialization, and none with a molecular mode of action for which there is no resistance. Because most herbicides could not kill all weeds, farmers rotate crops and herbicides to stop the development of resistant weeds.

Herbicide - Wikipedia

The importance of various factors influencing the evolution of herbicide resistance in weeds is critically examined using population genetic models. The factors include gene mutation, initial frequency of resistance alleles, inheritance, weed fitness in the presence and absence of herbicide, mating system, and gene flow.

The Evolution and Genetics of Herbicide Resistance in Weeds

Herbicide resistance in weeds poses one of the major risks for sustainability of herbicide use and farming systems. The present Special Issue focuses on herbicide resistance mechanisms and management and includes, but is not limited to, the following topics: New cases of herbicide resistance

(species, modes of action)

Special Issue "Weeds and Herbicide Resistance: Challenges ...

Herbicide-resistant weeds are difficult to manage once established. Weed seeds can stay dormant and alive in the soil for decades. Because of the long-lived nature of seeds within the soil, rotating away from a specific herbicide for a season or even several years is not sufficient to address herbicide-resistant weeds.
