The Enteric Nervous System

The enteric nervous system (ENS) or intrinsic nervous system is one of the main divisions of the autonomic nervous system (ANS) and consists of a mesh-like system of neurons that governs the function of the gastrointestinal tract. It is capable of acting independently of the sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous systems, although it may be influenced by them.

Enteric nervous system - Wikipedia

The enteric nervous system (ENS) is a web of sensory neurons, motor neurons, and interneurons embedded in the wall of the gastrointestinal system, stretching from the lower third of the esophagus right through to the rectum. The neurons of the ENS are arranged in two layers, the submucosal and myenteric plexuses of the gut wall.

enteric nervous system. A collection of neurons in the intestine that can function independently of the central nervous system and has been described as the 'brain of the gut'. This system is responsible for intestinal motility including PERISTALSIS, the secretory function of the intestine, the control of blood flow in the intestinal wall and the regulation of intestinal immune and inflammatory reactions.

The enteric nervous system is a network of neurons, which are nerve cells; chemical messengers called neurotransmitters; and special proteins located throughout the gastrointestinal system. It is sometimes referred to as the nervous system of the gut, or the "brain" or "mind" of the gut, but because it actually runs from the beginning to the end of the gastrointestinal system, it is not really confined to the gut area.
