This book is an almighty triumph for Craig Lancaster, who could not have written it more perfectly if he was Edward himself. If you thought 600 Hours of Edward was good, just wait until you read this. Finishing this book has left me feeling..... well, adrift! At least until Edward Unspooled hits our shelves pretty soon.

It is probably Craig Lancaster's writing style. Lancaster's deceptively simple writing pulls me right into the taunt and sheltered world of Edward Stanton, a man who has Asperger's syndrome. In the sequel, Edward is, as the title states, adrift. He is now in his 40s, with his reliably regimented life in disarray: job loss, broken bones, roman Craig Lancaster (born 1970) is an American writer and journalist, best known for his novels 600 Hours of Edward, its sequel, Edward Adrift, and The Summer Son. His other notable works include a short story collection as well as numerous articles and essays produced during his career as a newspaper writer and editor.

Craig Lancaster - Wikipedia

Edward Adrift continues Edward's journey, but the story shoots us forward 3 years. Edward is having a shitburger (I love the word shitburger) of a year. He's lost his job, his best friends have moved away, his beloved therapist has retired and he's still coming to terms with the death of his father 3 years earlier.

Edward Adrift is the second great book about the character, Edward. This book is best appreciated after reading the first Edward book (600 Hours of Edward). The two books could have been combined into Part I and then Part II, but having two books worked also. I just loved Edward's well-intentioned, honest, and rigid life.
