Scots law into the twenty-first century: reforming third party rights in contract

Contract Scotland Bill Scottish Legal

Contract (Third Party Rights) (Scotland) Bill. 8 March 2017 17/15 Angus Evans. The Contract (Third Party Rights) (Scotland) Bill (the Bill) proposes changing the law in Scotland which allows the parties to a contract to create rights for third parties. The aim is to make the law clearer and more usable. The Bill implements the recommendations made by the Scottish Law Commission in its 2016 Report "Review of Contract – Report on Third Party Rights".

Contracts (Third Party Rights) (Scotland) Bill

The key point in relation to the bill has been not so much to try to attract other people from around the world to choose Scots law as it has been to ensure that, for those who wish to use Scots law because they are businesses that are based here and their contracts will be performed here, Scots law provides the tools within itself to allow them to achieve what they wish to achieve without, in an artificial sense, having to use some foreign law—whether that is English law or any other law.
