Changing Lenses will get you thinking in new ways about criminal justice and about justice and injustice in general. The invitation to look at life through "new lenses" is critical. I read this book in advance of taking a course in "restorative justice" as part of the Summer Peacebuilding Institute at Eastern Mennonite University in Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Changing Lenses: A New Focus for Crime and Justice. Crime victims have many needs, most of which our criminal justice system ignores. In fact, the justice system often increases the injury. Offenders are less ignored by this system, but their real needs—for accountability, for closure, for healing—are also left unaddressed.

Finally “Changing Lenses”? State-Level Determinants of ...

Restorative justice offers a very different way of understanding and responding to crime. Instead of viewing the state as the primary victim in criminal acts and placing victims, offenders, and the community in passive roles, restorative justice recognizes crime as being directed against individual people.

Restorative Justice in the Twenty-First Century: A Social ...

In Changing Lenses, Howard Zehr describes restorative justice as focusing on the harms done, and consequent needs and obligations, of all parties involved (victims, offenders and the communities in which the harm occurred). He sets forth these six guiding questions: Who has been hurt? What are their needs?

Howard Zehr - Wikipedia

By changing this focus, restorative justice brings the person who committed the harm closer to the community by allowing them to make reparation for the harm caused. When we look at things with reparation in mind, we gain a better appreciation for the problem that exists with the traditional punitive model.

"Changing Lenses" details the abuses of our current retributive justice system and proposes a new (and old) biblical, practical and indispensable vision for a criminal system that restores justice. Zehr combines his theological and intellectual insights with his experience as founder of the first victim-offender mediation program in the United States.

Changing Lenses: A New Focus for Crime and Justice ...

This essay examines common assumptions about crime and justice, which it terms a "retributive" lens or paradigm, and considers historical, biblical and practical alternatives. A "restorative" model is proposed that is based on the needs of victims and offenders, past ways of responding to crime, recent experiments and biblical principles.
