Set theory is a branch of mathematical logic that studies sets, which informally are collections of objects. Although any type of object can be collected into a set, set theory is applied most often to objects that are relevant to mathematics. The language of set theory can be used to define nearly all mathematical objects. The modern study of set theory was initiated by Georg

Cantor and Richard Dedekind in the 1870s. After the discovery of paradoxes in naive set theory, such as Russell's parado

In the foundations of mathematics, Russell's paradox, discovered by Bertrand Russell in 1901, showed that the naive set theory created by Georg Cantor leads to a contradiction. According to naive set theory, any definable collection is a set. Let R be the set of all sets that are not members of themselves.
