Plastics : Product Design and Process Engineering ...

Moggridge and Cussler (2000) proposed chemical product design as being comprised of four essential steps: (1) identification of consumer needs that should be met by the product, (2) generation of ideas that can satisfy the needs, (3) selection of the most promising product idea, and (4) development of a process to manufacture the desired product. While it is not stated how these steps should be performed, for steps 2 and 3, use of experiment-based trial and error approaches is common.
