Adolescent Mothers in Later Life by Frank F. Furstenberg

This landmark study traces the life histories of approximately 300 teenage mothers and their children over a seventeen-year period. From interview data and case studies, it provides a vivid account of the impact of early childbearing on young mothers and their children.

Adolescent mothers in later life.

Adolescent mothers may not have much time to spend with their children due to the competing demands of school or work; they may need to piece together complex childrearing arrangements; they may not be the most competent of parents because of social immaturity or inadequate knowledge about childrearing; and of course, they are likely to be economically disadvantaged.
