Drawing Connections Between the "Big Picture" and the Details: One common approach to commenting on student work is to offer praise, criticism, and questions in the margins of a paper, and then to provide a more general overview of what the paper does well and what it does poorly in a head note or end note.

Giving Feedback on Student Writing | U-M LSA Sweetland ...

Feedback: Clear about problem (weak argument) and why (missing negatives). Is consistent (student had this same problem on an earlier assignment). Makes a suggestion (diagram) and offers encouragement (good start). It might have been better to open with the encouraging comment, though.

Phrasing positive and negative feedback

Perhaps some of the following comments will help improve the organization of the paper and make clearer the ideas you are presenting. Reread the first paragraph of the paper. Rewrite the paragraph to clarify whether this paper is focusing on the rhetoric of the event (eg "lies" and "gave the message that. . .") or the sociological aspects of the event (eg "not allowing outsiders to participate").

Sample of a Professor's Remarks on a Student Paper ...

Your comments on student writing should clearly reflect the hierarchy of your concerns about the paper. Major issues should be treated more prominently and at greater length; minor issues should be treated briefly or not at all.

Responding to Student Writing | Harvard Writing Project

understand the connection between the paper and your final comments. If you tell a student in the final comment that he or she needs more analysis, for example, the student should be able to locate one or more specific sites in the text that you think are lacking. • Make some positive comments. "Good point" and "great move here" mean a lot to students, as do

Responding to Student Writing

Tell students upfront what you will be looking for in their papers. Then keep this focus in mind when formulating comments on each paper. If you're concentrating on argument, provide direct feedback on each student's argument. For example: "Your argument is strong, clearly stated, and supported by ample evidence.”
