2. Principles of Haptic Rendering: Object Shape Typically, a haptic rendering algorithm is made of two parts: (a) collision detection and (b) collision response (see Figure 1). As the user manipulates the probe of the haptic device, the new position and orientation of the haptic probe are acquired, collisions with the virtual objects are detected (i.e. collision detection). If a collision is detected, the interaction forces are computed using

Definition of Haptic Rendering: The computational model which allows the creation of reaction forces between the virtual tool being manipulated by the user and the physics-based object. Such computed reaction forces are then send back to the haptic device for creation of sense of touch at the hand of the user.

What is Haptic Rendering | IGI Global

We have developed a haptic environment that incorporates auditory sensation. We achieved this by fitting a speaker at the end effector of a haptic interface. The FEM (finite element method) was used to calculate the vibration of a virtual object when an impact is occurred, and the sound pressure data at the speaker position was then calculated based on the 2D complex amplitude of the object surface in real time.
