Tissues Anatomy And Physiology Study

A tissue membrane is a thin layer or sheet of cells that covers the outside of the body (for example, skin), the organs (for example, pericardium), internal passageways that lead to the exterior of the body (for example, abdominal mesenteries), and the lining of the moveable joint cavities. There are two basic types of tissue membranes: connective tissue and epithelial membranes (Figure 3).

Types of Tissues | Anatomy and Physiology I

The study of the shape and arrangement of cells in tissue is called histology. All cells and tissues in the body derive from three germ layers in the embryo: the ectoderm, mesoderm, and endoderm. Different types of tissues form membranes that enclose organs, provide a friction-free interaction between organs, and keep organs together.

4.1 Types of Tissues - Anatomy and Physiology

Epithelium consists of closely packed, flattened cells that make up the inside or outside lining of body areas. There is little intercellular material. The tissue is avascular, meaning without blood vessels. Nutrient and waste exchange occurs through neighboring connective tissues by diffusion. The upper surface of epithelium is free, or exposed to the outside of the body or to an internal body cavity.
