In about 1974, I was giving transition training to a pilot who had been flying a King Air A90 that his company had replaced with a new C90. A part of our flight training syllabus was to give a real engine failure during a two-engine bailed landing exercise. Needless to say, we had a rule to do all real engine shutdowns at or above 5,000 feet AGL. Typically, we would start a "make believe ...

For many years, I maintained a B200 owned by a family business that had used the same pilot for ages. He was ex-airline and a decent stick, but every time he picked up the King Air after maintenance, he pulled the door shut, started the engines, and took off – he didn't even check the oil! This boggled my mind. I've seen a lot of pre-flight routines, but this was no pre-flight at all ...
