Mara And Dann 1 Doris

The close relationship between Mara and Dann is at the heart of the story. Their mutual dependency and love, threatened by Dann's wild egotism, holds one's interest. At the end, incestuous desires almost take the story in a radical direction, but a somewhat perfunctory happy ending (at least for Mara) closes off this more dangerous avenue.

At the southern end of a large landmass called Ifrik, two children of the Mahondi people, seven-year-old Mara and her younger brother, Dann, are abducted from their home and family in the middle of the night. Left in the care of a sympathetic Mahondi woman, Mara and Dann are raised as outsiders in a poor rural village.

Mara and Dann by Doris Lessing

Lessing's 22nd novel, a dystopian allegory set in "Ifrik" (formerly Africa) thousands of years hence, is a ponderous, hectoring, fascinating second cousin to her Memoirs of a Survivor (1975) and The Four-Gated City (1969) (and quite reminiscent, incidentally, of Norman Mailer's similarly forbidding Ancient Evenings). After a global war and second Ice Age have decimated the continent ...

This article considers pedagogy as a consistent theme in Doris Lessing’s fiction. It draws on a deleted prefatory note in the typescript to Mara and Dann, which states that the heroine is ‘consumed with a passion to learn and go to school’. The article explores how Mara learns, in a re-imagined Africa after a future ice age. In the absence of formal schooling, a game is used, in which ...
