Search Menu. Judith B. Steinhoff explores the fourteenth century as a liminal age for art in Siena (p. 5). She acknowledges that the “Golden Age” of Sienese painting arrived early in the century while her major interest reaches into the era after the Black Plague, 1348-1349, and continues through the last decades of the century. In this later era she finds an “extremely sophisticated and self-conscious sponsorship of art” intended to promote both religious and ...
