LaTeX understands three basic document styles: report, article, and letter. Many add commands to LaTeX, but some are whole document-changing styles. The major difference between the report and article styles is that reports can have chapters and sections but articles can only have sections. The letter style, of course, formats letters.

The Guide - Basic LaTeX commands

The goal is to produce a fairly basic article, of similar style to what a research paper would resemble. To achieve this efficiently, this tutorial focuses largely on document structure. LaTeX practically forces you to declare structure within your documents. This is a good thing though.
