Introduction. TIA/EIA 568A and TIA/EIA 568B refer to the two major standards used in the networking and telecommunications industries. These standards determine the order of the wires placed in a RJ45 connector. With the only difference between the two standards is the placement of cable pairs on set pins, functionally both standards are the same. Knowing the different uses and pinout positions of each cable is essential to ensure a network's proper functionality.
