Children's right to play is a matter of spatial justice ...

Spatial awareness is the ability of a child to understand where they are in relation to objects or where objects or structures are in relation to each other. It also refers to understanding how an object changes in relation to them when they move. Now, this may sound like a really basic skill (which it is) that every child would get automatically (they should) in their daily activities (but they don't anymore)!
