To some extent, we can learn about life in biblical times by combing the biblical text, but our ability to extract reliable data from the biblical text alone is hampered by a number of problems. First, the Bible does not always give a clear answer, either because we no longer understand certain terms, [1] or because textual variants say different things, or because of different biblical passages written by different authors offer contradictory information.

1. The Wednesday view is an attempt to do justice (literal justice) to the statement in Matthew 12:40, “three days and three nights.” By our exact reckoning, that would be 72 hours. But if Jesus died on Wednesday, that would mean the resurrection was on Saturday, when the Gospels are unanimous that it was the first day of the week.

The popular view of life in ancient Egypt is often that it was a death -obsessed culture in which powerful pharaohs forced the people to labor at constructing pyramids and temples and, at an unspecified time, enslaved the Hebrews for this purpose. In reality, ancient Egyptians loved life, no matter their social class, and the ancient Egyptian government used slave labor as every other ancient culture did without regard to any particular ethnicity.
