The heritage industry: Britain in a climate of decline. A very provocative and damning study of Britain's heritage industry in which Hewison suggests that heritage has become a poor replacement for industrial employment during the postwar period. Written during the economic problems of the late 1980s, perhaps a little dated now, or are we going through another period of decline?

Heritage of Industry

Heritage film is a critical term as opposed to a film genre label used by the film industry or filmmakers themselves. It initially referred to a cluster or cycle of late 20th-century British films that were argued to depict the United Kingdom of the pre-World War II decades in a nostalgic fashion.

However, this original polemic use has broadened out, and the term is now also used more loosely to refer to period films with high-quality visual production values, including those produced in France,
