Type III hypersensitivity occurs when there is accumulation of immune complexes that have not been adequately cleared by innate immune cells, giving rise to an inflammatory response and attraction of leukocytes. Such reactions may progress to immune complex diseases. Type III hypersensitivity Immune complex SpecialtyImmunology

Type III hypersensitivity - Wikipedia

Parham’s research has focused on proteins of the human immune system that vary greatly between individuals and populations. These differences, the consequence of natural selection, not only modulate the immune response to infection and cancer, but also influence the success of reproduction and therapeutic transplantation of cells, tissues, and organs.
