Abstract. However reluctant he may be about providing details, Karl Barth dares to affirm the coming resurrection, even in the strong corporeal sense of the Apostles Creed, "I believe in . . . the resurrection of the flesh.". At the heart of Barth's creative approach is an equation between revelation and resurrection.

Karl Barth and the resurrection of the flesh

At no time since the second and third centuries has the central affirmation of Christian faith won so much attention from theologians and exegetes. This renewed interest in the resurrection was pioneered by Karl Barth (1886–1968), whose Epistle to the Romans in its second edition of 1922 marks the real beginning of twentieth-century theology. To prevent this investigation of Barth's view of Christ's resurrection from becoming confused and confusing, it seems advisable to make use of a ...

The fact that Jesus Christ is the Lord of life with power to forgive sins requires just as thoroughgoing a proof as did his death, Barth adds. And this proof consists in the resurrection, that is, in the transfiguring and glorifying of the man Jesus Christ. In His unity with man the Son of God endures death; then conversely it must be in His unity with man that He conquers it.
