So. It's the greatest flaw in modern thinking: denying the soul. Go ahead and roll your eyes — and then ask yourself why the world is teetering on the brink. But what we don't often realize is that it's perfectly reasonable to be an atheist, rationalist, materialist, whatever, and not deny the soul. There's no contradiction there: "isms" are just beliefs, but a soul is an empirical experience, requiring no belief whatsoever.

Human Composting: The Ultimate Denial of the Soul - Crisis ...

The denial of the soul is a logical consequence of materialism because, if mindless matter is the "ultimate reality" (or the something-from-which-everything-else-comes), then we have no explanation for consciousness (mind). There is no way to explain how rearrangements of mindless matter and/or energy can produce consciousness.
