Physiologic voice therapy may be adopted when the voice disorder is caused by a disturbance in the physiology of the vocal mechanism. Therapy directly modifies the abnormal physiologic activity affecting respiration, phonation, and resonance. Physiologic voice therapy aims to create a balance between the various subsystems.

Voice therapy - Wikipedia

Voice therapy can work on many aspects of the voice in order to help an individual communicate more effectively, these include breath support, laryngeal posture, resonance, intonation, rate and rhythm, volume and pitch. Our speech and language therapists may use a combination of the above treatments when helping an individual with a voice disorder.

Voice therapy | SLT | Expert providers of speech and ...

Speech and language therapists (SLTs) have an important role in assessing, treating, managing and preventing voice disorders. In many cases, voice therapy delivered by an SLT can help to improve or eliminate a voice problem. SLTs work closely with Ear, Nose and Throat (ENT) Doctors, GPs and other professionals to help improve voice disorders.

Voice - Overview

For anyone wanting to practise in the field of voice care, be it within speech therapy, ENT or other allied professional specialities, the British Voice Association gives an invaluable insight into the professional voice user, a national network of contacts to be able to discuss cases with and refer to, and up to date courses and discussions to keep those working in multidisciplinary voice clinics across the country on the cutting edge of phoniatrics.

THE BRITISH VOICE ASSOCIATION : The 'voice for voice' in ...

Behavioral Voice Therapy Behavioral Voice Therapy consists of two main parts, Vocal hygiene and exercises, to change the biomechanics of voice production. Vocal hygiene is similar to dental hygiene, a daily program to keep the voice functioning at its highest level. Maintaining good nutrition and hydration is a key to vocal hygiene.

ENT and Allergy Associates | Voice Treatment and Therapy

Speech therapy can help you learn to communicate in the clearest and most effective way possible. Your speech and language therapist (SLT) normally assesses and advises you before surgery. Therapy usually begins as soon as possible after surgery and normally continues after you go home. Your SLT assesses changes in your speech and voice.
