During the late Middle Ages, a considerable number of men in Germany and Switzerland were executed for committing sodomy.
 Even in the seventeenth century, simply speaking of the act was cause for censorship. Here, in the first history of sodomy in these countries, Helmut Puff argues that accusations of sodomy during this era were actually crucial to the success of the Protestant Reformation.

Thus, the 'cultural matrix of sodomy' reveals the complexities of early modern German society in the throes of intertwined administrative, legal, and religious transformations. And, furthermore, Puff contends that the multiplicities of this idiom were unique to German society, for most Italian communities throughout the period prosecuted sodomy on a much more frequent basis.

Drawing on both literary and historical evidence, Puff shows that speakers of German associated sodomy with Italy and, increasingly, Catholicism. As the Reformation gained momentum, the formerly unspeakable crime of sodomy gained a voice, as Martin Luther and others deployed accusations of sodomy to discredit the upper ranks of the Church and to create a sense of community among Protestant believers.
