Roots. The brachial plexus is a group of nerves that control the muscles of the shoulder, arm, forearm and hand. These same nerves also provide sensation (feeling) of the whole upper limb. The brachial plexus nerves begin as “roots” off of the spinal cord. The brachial plexus roots come out of the spinal column between the vertebrae.

The seminal root system includes the plant's radicle (the first root emerging from the seed). These roots are responsible for taking up water and nutrients, and for anchoring the plant. The second root system, the nodal roots, is formed about an inch or so below the soil surface, but above the seminal roots. The nodal roots are formed at the base of the coleoptile, which is the primary stem ...
