A Place To Go How

A Place to Go is a 1963 British crime drama film directed by Basil Dearden and starring Bernard Lee, Rita Tushingham and Michael Sarne. Set in contemporary Bethnal Green in the East End of London, it charted the dramatic changes that were then happening in the lives of the British working class, fitting into the kitchen sink school of film-making which was popular in Britain at the time.

A Place to Go - Wikipedia

Directed by Basil Dearden. With Rita Tushingham, Michael Sarne, Bernard Lee, Doris Hare. A young man employed by a cigarette factory is tired of his working class status and joins a gang planning to rob the factory warehouse.

A Place to Go (1963) - IMDb

As a document of the changing face of urban family life in the socially transformative 1960s, A Place To Go is much more successful, providing some 'social realism' of the type found in the more noted

Kitchen Sink Dramas of the era (Saturday Night And Sunday Morning, A Kind Of Loving, etc.), much in the way of authentic locations (centred around Bethnal Green), and all brought to life (tragic and humorous) via a series of impressive character performances from Dearden's cast.

A Place to Go [DVD]: Amazon.co.uk: Bernard Lee, Rita ...

A Place to Go comes several years after some of his more famous and critically lauded pieces of social criticism, and two decades after his early attempts at social realist crime cinema, and somehow he blends both in some kind of response to the kitchen sink - angry young man films of the period in a somewhat unsatisfying manner.
