Instead, shield babies from the wind with your stroller or car seat's canopy or sun shield (and don't cover her face, especially if she's less than a year old, as it can restrict her breathing). For an older child, pull a neck warmer over the bottom of her mouth or cover her with a winter mask to warm the air before it hits her lungs.

How to Protect Babies and Toddlers From Extreme Cold

Having fun while stomping through the snow is a terrific way for children to stay active in the fresh cold air. But dressing properly is the key to a whine-free experience, so make sure you pick up a sturdy pair of warm boots to keep kids' little feet cozy and dry this winter season. Look for sealed seams, thick lining and rugged soles for footwear that will last all season and could even be handed down to younger siblings.
