The Ford 351W or 351 Windsor is classic American muscle. Part of the 90 degree small block V-8 family of Ford engines, the 351 Windsor reached its peak stock horsepower in 1969 at 290. Though this small block is a platform capable of much greater performance, you can easily modify it to make more horsepower and torque.

Windsor small-block: The Ford Windsor small-block is the ubiquitous "small-block Ford" engine, with the most common variants the 302 and the 351 Windsor, the family ranged from 221 cubic inches to 351 cubic inches.

A Guide To Ford V8 Engine Block Casting Numbers, 1952-1996

The main difference between the blocks was the Deck Height. The 351 blocks were as much as 1.300 in. taller to allow for a longer Stroke. You can spot the difference pretty easily by looking at the front of the engine. On a 302 (or smaller c.i.d.) blocks, the distributor mount is almost flush with the top of the block (where the intake sits).

What's the difference between a 302 and a 351W?

The quickest way to identify a Ford 351 Windsor engine is to count the number of bolts on the valve covers. The valve covers are located on the top of the engine, one on either side of the air cleaner, and each will have six bolts. If the valve cover is removed, you will see "351" stamped on the cylinder head in the valve valley.

The Cleveland 351 is between a small block and a big block. Even though the Cleveland 351 came from the small block family, few parts will interchange. The heads on the 351 4 barrel engine were very similar to the Boss 302 heads. In 1971, Ford offered only a two barrel version of the 302 motor. The Boss motor option was called the Boss 351.
