Dull or very bright light can also make birds look different. Fluffy birds. Bear in mind that in cold weather, birds can 'fluff out' their feathers and appear much fatter and more rounded (they also do this to make themselves look bigger to a rival). Birds with long necks, such as herons, can coil them up next to their bodies and look quite different, and a bird alerted to the presence of a predator might stretch its neck out in order to see it properly.
