With These Hands
Poem Lillian

With these hands I cannot defile you, They are to lift you, My sister! With these words I cannot demean
you. They are to encourage you and
comfort you, My Sister!
With this strength I cannot destroy you. It is to defend you, My Sister! With this heart, I cannot reject you. It is to love, My Sister!

With these hands I've held you when you were feeling low. Hand in hand I'll walk with you wherever you may go. Make no demand I'll always feel the way I do right now. You help me stand. With you I feel it all works out somehow. Not what we planned or wanted, but yet it feels so right. With these hands I'll love you in darkness and in light.

And with these hands I dab the eyes, Officiate at fond goodbyes, As in the earth we gravely dig The late lamented guinea pig. I bow my head, cross my chest, And lay his furry soul to rest, Reflecting that, on many a day, I could have helped him on his way. I greet the folks who bang the door, Fill the mouths that shout for more,

Blessing of the Hands.
These are the hands of your best friend, young and strong and full of love for you, that are holding yours on your wedding day, as you promise to love each other today, tomorrow,
and forever. These are the hands that will

as together you build

the hands that will

LILLIAN HELLMAN. Yes, short stories, a few poems. A couple of the stories were printed in a long-dead magazine called The Paris Comet for which Arthur Kober worked. Arthur and I were married and living in Paris. Let's see, about 1928, 1929, somewhere in there. They were very lady-writer stories. I reread them a few years ago.

The complex health needs of dementia patients have somehow been neglected as COVID-19 took the world by storm. Eight months in, the pandemic is taking a devastating toll on the estimated 5.8 million Americans living with dementia. These patients require hands-on care and can be sensitive to changes in routine; now both are difficult to navigate.
