The Ideal Gas Law, $PV=nRT$ was made by combining the four laws into one single equation(1). In theory, an ideal gas would not have a volume or any intermolecular forces acting between the molecules, however, there is no gas that actually behaves like this(2). There are various gases where under specific conditions, can behave almost like an ideal gas.

An ideal gas follows the ideal gas law at all conditions of P and T. The particles in an ideal gas do not have finite size and volume. The collisions between the ideal gas particles are said to be elastic, they exert no attractive or repulsive forces. Hydrogen gas generated in today's experiment is, however, a real gas not an ideal gas.

The Ideal Gas Law reveals that the pressure exerted by a mole of molecules does not depend on what those molecules are, and our earlier observation about gas mixtures is consistent with that conclusion. We now examine the actual process of mixing two gases together and measuring the total pressure.
