Paisley or paisley pattern is an ornamental textile design using the boteh or buta, a teardrop-shaped motif with a curved upper end. Of Persian origin, paisley designs became very popular in the West in the 18th and 19th centuries, following imports of post-Mughal Empire versions of the design from India, especially in the form of Kashmir shawls, and were then replicated locally. Although the pine cone or almond-like form is of Persian origin, and the textile designs cramming many of them ...

Paisley (design) - Wikipedia

Paisley is a droplet-shaped vegetable motif of Persian and Indian origin. It resembles a twisted teardrop that is kidney-shaped. When it is made into a pattern, it is sometimes called “Persian pickles” by American traditionalists, especially when it is designed on quilts and textiles. There are many stories about the origin of paisley.

The transfer from Persian and Kashmiri cultures to become a popular motif in textile manufacturing in Britain came after the East India Company imported large amounts of shawls and other goods with the motif in the 18th Century. The shawls were immensely popular, which meant that they were often in short supply, and very expensive.
