The most controversial chapter in the collection is that of Sherman Jackson who is the only author who sees Islamophobia as a phobia—the irrational fear of Islam. He challenges what he sees as the racial agnosticism of many

Muslims in the USA, and sees this as a danger for the second and third generations who may suffer from an identity crisis as they are placed 'into a racial non-category that disqualifies them from the benefits of America's quest for historical redemption' (p. 101).
