The Ethics of Confucius | Online Library of Liberty

Confucius created a rational and humane ethical system, as opposed to a legal institution, to govern and stabilise the country by mobilising, rather than repressing people's emotions. Accordingly, he established a comprehensive ritual procedure (礼) for people to follow the formal rules, and instituted human ethical relations (人伦) as a basis for informal personal interactions.

The goal of Confucius's ethics is for the human person to mirror the dao of heaven; indeed this is the point of de, ren, and cheng; each of these marks a component of the person's conformity to the dao. Thus, in Confucian ethics, the end is something over and above the completion of human nature; it is conformity to a transcendent order.
