Note. This tutorial assumes that readers have been familiar with ZhuSuan's basic concepts. Recent years have seen neural networks' powerful abilities in fitting complex transformations, with successful applications on speech recognition, image classification, and machine translation, etc. However, typical training of neural networks requires lots of labeled data to control the risk of overfitting.

Neural networks are composed of simple building blocks called neurons. While many people try to draw correlations between a neural network neuron and biological neurons, I will simply state the obvious here: “A neuron is a mathematical function that takes data as input, performs a transformation on them, and produces an output”.

A recurrent neural network (RNN) is a class of artificial neural networks where connections between nodes form a directed graph along a temporal sequence. This allows it to exhibit temporal dynamic behavior. Derived from feedforward neural networks, RNNs can use their internal state (memory) to process variable length sequences of inputs. [1] This makes them applicable to tasks such as ...
